Why is Communication in Health and Social Care essential?

Health and social care professionals need excellent communication skills to develop positive relationships and share information with people using services. They also need to be able to communicate well with people's families and/or carers and their colleagues and other professionals. It is essential, therefore if you are considering a career in health and social care, to gain the knowledge, understanding and practical skills needed to develop effective interpersonal skills.

Professionally, if you are applying for jobs or looking for a promotion with your current employer, you will almost certainly need to demonstrate excellent communication skills. Communication skills are required to speak appropriately with a wide variety of people while maintaining good eye contact, show a varied vocabulary and tailor your language to your audience, listen effectively, present your ideas appropriately, write clearly and concisely, and work well in a group. Many of these are essential skills that employers seek.
